

Carine Sanadina

Healthcare Professional | Author | Survivor Advocate | Emotional Wellness Voice

Jacksonville, Florida, United States

About

Carine Sanadina is a Congolese-born, Jacksonville-based healthcare professional, author, artist, and survivor advocate whose work transforms lived pain into healing-centered literature and inspiration.

Her writing explores domestic violence survival, toxic relationships, emotional wounds, faith, resilience, motherhood, immigrant experience, and the journey from brokenness to restoration. Through books such as The Pain Nobody Saw, If It's Red, It's Toxic, and The Road to Sunshine, Carine gives language to silent pain and helps readers recognize unhealthy patterns, reclaim identity, and choose hope after survival.

Her professional background in healthcare strengthens her voice with compassion, discipline, and real human understanding. Carine's brand stands at the intersection of caregiving, storytelling, faith, emotional wellness, and personal transformation.

Featured Works

- The Pain Nobody Saw: A Hidden Story of Abuse and Survival
- If It's Red, It's Toxic
- The Road to Sunshine: A Journey of Struggles, Faith and Hope

Core Focus Areas

- Domestic Violence Awareness
- Toxic Relationship Recovery
- Women's Empowerment
- Immigrant and Refugee Experience
- Inspirational Writing
- Emotional Healing
- Faith and Resilience
- Self-Worth and Identity
- Motherhood and Survival
- Human-Centered Care

Professional Positioning

Healthcare Professional: Provides compassionate, patient-centered support in a healthcare environment, bringing empathy, professionalism, and human understanding to daily service.

Author and Inspirational Voice: Writes books and reflective content centered on survival, healing, faith, toxic relationship awareness, emotional restoration, and personal transformation.

Pain may shape the story, but it does not get to own the ending.